Course Description:

Description: This program is designed specifically for international, mid-grade, officer-level students (military and civilian) with maritime experience. The dynamics of the class composition add to the learning experience as students share their various views and experiences. The course provides professional military study in the organization, planning, management and operation of a multi-mission maritime force. The program addresses the value of honor and integrity; effective leadership and management skills; and the rules, customs, and traditions that govern an officer corps. An overview of search and rescue concepts is provided. During the maritime law enforcement phase of training, students discuss international law, boarding procedures, hidden compartments, high-risk search tactics, drug identification and testing, and prisoner processing. The maritime law enforcement phase concludes with an operational planning exercise. Marine safety topics include marine environmental response, safety and occupational health, pollution response techniques, contingency planning, marine licensing, and commercial vessel inspection. Leadership and management training consists of a senior managers seminar focusing on the habits of highly effective leaders in both the military and private enterprise. The Defense Institute for International Legal Studies (DIILS) staff presents a one-week block of instruction dealing with rule of law and military operations. Each student is required to make an oral presentation during the first week of class explaining the highlights and customs of his/her home country.

Prerequisites: None; however, solid navigational skills are essential for practical exercises and group discussions. Note: This course is not appropriate for noncommissioned officer personnel.
